

Prepackaged salads and spinach may contain E. coli.

Search

Claim: Prepackaged salads and spinach may contain E. coli.

predict: 0 confidence: 0.560026675186 using 247.539674044

Evidence 1

...this strain is more potent than in any other food poisoning scares federal health officials said half of those reported sick have been hospitalized compared to 25 to 30 percent in past outbreaks the fda called for bagged fresh spinach to be removed from shelves and warned people not to eat any kind of fresh spinach or fresh spinachcontaining products...

View Evidence >

Evidence 2

...one of these outbreaks involving spinach occurred in california in 2006 in all 199 people in 26 states were infected with the outbreak strain of e greens are washed by commercial processes before they head to the grocery store...

View Evidence >

Evidence 3

...acheson said that in november 2005 there had been small outbreak of e coli in spinach from the salinas valley more should have been done he added...

View Evidence >

Evidence 4

...will definitely start washing even the prepackaged salad was unaware that the prepackaged salad was washed in chemicals after learning that think will probably start buying the salad that is not prepackaged...

View Evidence >

Evidence 5

...earlier the fda confirmed to the colorado department of public health and environment that the chicken salad has been pulled from store shelves in that state health investigators said that the people who bought the chicken salad purchased it in late october or early november if youve got